Category:Disk image editors Category:Linux CD/DVD writing softwareQ: Chaining promises in IE doesn't work as I expected The function that I have written uses 2 promises. Both the promises are resolved at some point of the execution. For some reason in IE all the promises got resolved together after completing the execution. I don't understand the behavior of this. Here is the code: var p1 = new Promise(function(resolve) { console.log("p1"); resolve("foo"); }); var p2 = new Promise(function(resolve) { console.log("p2"); resolve("bar"); }); p1.then(function() { console.log("p1 resolved"); console.log("p2"); }).then(function() { console.log("p2 resolved"); }); I expected the following sequence of execution for IE: p1 resolved p2 resolved But what I see is p1 resolved p2 resolved It seems like, the code execution continues and resolves the 2 promises together. Is there any reason for this? A: No reason, really - promises are simple and should be treated as such. I wonder if IE is the issue or if this is the problem in all browsers? You'll note that if you were to chain the calls instead of nesting them, then it works as expected: var p1 = new Promise(function(resolve) { console.log("p1"); resolve("foo"); }); var p2 = new Promise(function(resolve) { console.log("p2"); resolve("bar"); }); p1.then(function() { 3da54e8ca3
